

A proposition now awaits the approval of the people of Covington to grant the use of the streets for a street railway, on condition that the grantee shall provide for the completion of the bridge across the Ohio. One would suppose that the only question that could be raised in the case was whether the grant for a street railway, which is in itself desirable, and which is to be provided at ordinary rates of fare, will secure the additional convenience of a bridge, and whether the grant is sufficiently guarded to enable the city to enforce its conditions.

The great advantages of the bridge to the city of Covington would hardly seem to admit of a question. Yet we understand that the grant will be opposed, on the ground that the railroad connection which the bridge will furnish, will transfer the business of Covington to Cincinnati, and that freight and passengers will pass through the place without paying any tribute. Such considerations as these, compared with the advantages of sharing on equal terms the property of Cincinnati, seem much like the wish of another progressive individual, that everybody was dead, when he would keep the half-way in. Prosperity was never yet built up by embargo. The largest facilities and freedom from restrictions result in the greatest aggregations of trade. If difficulties of transit promote the prosperity of Covington, they promote the prosperity of Cincinnati, and give employment to a laboring population in making the ferrage in skills and flat-boats. Her prosperity has probably been promoted thus far by the increase of facilities of communication with this city. So it will be as these facilities are improved, and without limit when they become as easy as through our own streets.

The rapid growth of Brooklyn is an instance to show that, instead of the smaller place being absorbed in the greater, by the ease of communication, it draws from the greater its wealth and desirable population. Brooklyn is a great city of wealth, elegance and refinement, and has acquired the name of the city of churches, all of which elements are largely supported by the business of New York. The relations of Covington to Cincinnati will be similar when communications are made as easy with that as with a great portion of this city.

Any local jealousy of the effect of the proposed improvement should be felt at all, it should be on the part of the Cincinnatians, but the interests of the places will be as identical as those of different streets of our own town, and local feeling no greater than between them.

As to the transfer of the railroad freight, which is probably one of the chief grounds of hostility to the project, the great business of the country will not be stopped to pay toll to unnecessary impediments. The routes which offer least detention and break of connections, will take the great trade, while those which offer obstruction will be confined to a retail business, and will be compelled to retire from wholesale competition. The greatest levy which can be made upon the railroad transit from the Kentucky to the Ohio shore will be a mere drop, compared with the increase of all branches of industry from this communication. The employment furnished by the railroad itself will increase, instead of being diminished, while a rapidly-growing city will create a demand for labor in proportion to its growth, and the element which is now the obstacle to this project will be astonished at its blindness to its own interest.

The Price of the Pennsylvania Vote.
The Philadelphia correspondent of the New York Tribune writes that paper:

"So far as regards the vote of Pennsylvania for President, you may set it down as a sure thing that no candidate can receive it who is not an open, flat-footed advocate of Protection. The coal and iron interests have resolved on this as indispensable."

Pennsylvania is doubtless quite positive on this head, and the Republican party is quite willing to take for its doctrine whatever is necessary to carry Pennsylvania; though, as far as heard from, there are no prophets going about now making iron swim, and the Republican party, with Pennsylvania iron and coal tied to its neck, will hardly keep its head above water.

There is not the slightest chance that the Republican party should hand-cup itself for the Presidential race with Pennsylvania. To be sure, that State wants protection for her coal and iron, and free trade for every other State's "peculiar vanity," but she is very easily managed. General Jackson got along easily with his "Judicial tariff," and "Polk, Dallas and the Tariff of '42," was a successful battle cry in Pennsylvania. Buchanan was also a good enough protectionist for that State, although he ran the Government in debt, rather than decidedly recommend higher duties. It makes very little difference who is nominated, or on what platform; only get-up some protection badges for Pennsylvania circulation, and the thing will be done.

As there is a duty of twenty-four per cent. on iron now, the query is, how much duty Pennsylvania wants for her vote on the Presidency? There is such a thing as paying too dear for even an iron whistle. Twenty-four per cent duty and three thousand miles transportation would seem to be a pretty liberal protection, and if Pennsylvania can not, at this rate, compete with the lower wages of labor in Great Britain, let her increase her bank circulation still more, and inflate the wages of labor still higher, and of everything else in proportion. The more she debases the money by increasing its quantity, the higher the duty she will require to keep pace with the inflation of wages, and the more impossible it will be to manufacture anything with fictitious capital here as cheaply as it can be bought with real money abroad.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Charleston Mercury argues the necessity of keeping a regiment of their volunteer troops in readiness for service during the month of the Convention, and intimates that it will be proper to be prepared for something unusual at the time.

The Charleston people had better keep their military out of danger, and not put on any extra airs for there will be outside Democrats enough there to take the town and hold it at discretion.

Singular Hallucination.
Mr. Menkin has applied to the Court of Common Pleas, of this county, for a divorce from his wife, Ada Menkin, who has recently added to her Hebrew acquisition the Liberman name of Heeman, and proclaims herself the wife of the Benicia Boy, whom she terms "the bravest man in the world." She has also been writing letters to various New York papers about her "inner life," and her aspirations for "the good, the beautiful and true;" and publishing sonnets to the Benicia Boy, the burden of which is "Come back to me"—a very unreasonable request, considering Heeman's pressing engagement with Sayers. It will not do for the Boy to enervate his muscle by tender dalliance, for when he meets the champion's embrace, like Fitz James, he will find "No maiden's arm is round him thrown."

To complicate the matter still more, Ada's fine writing has brought a Mrs. Heeman into the papers, who asserts her right to the Boy by the regular, though gross and material ceremony, and by several "pledges of their mutual love" as they are querulously termed in the romances; pledges of love which could hardly be put up any fanciful spot of society without the cold and business-like indorsement of the marriage certificate.

And now comes Mr. Menkin into court and asks to be released from matrimonial bonds, of which divine Ada seems quite oblivious. While she is casting her longing aspirations over the water and singing "Come back to me," he opens a fire upon her rear—to use the military phrase of America's greatest general—and reminds her of chains which her ethereal nature had quite soared out of a warning to our married readers against looking up too intently for "the good, the beautiful and true."

It certainly is a mysterious case. There is a time foretold in prophecy when "seven women shall cleave to one man;" but in this case there are but two, so it will have to be accounted for on natural principles. Solomon would have cut this Gordian knot in a summary way, and the "Benicia Boy" would be served out to meet the demand. But although this is often quoted as a precedent of superior wisdom, it is not regarded as adapted to the modern code. It is probable, however, that a man of Solomon's wisdom and experience would decide that Mr. Menkin's acts were very like a husband's. As galloping horses show that they have been used for draught, so Mr. Menkin's anxiety for divorce would show the true husband.

Hon. S. S. Cox, who signs himself "Chancellor," in the Ohio Statesman, has a remarkable mind for Parliamentary order. It must be original with him, and not at all derived from Jefferson's manual. He displayed it in the House when Mr. Lovejoy was exercising the colored "twins" for the admiration of his parents. Mr. Prior, he that is so terrible in invective—on women, made a demonstration to assault Mr. Lovejoy, though his diet, which was very fiery at the start, became cold victuals before he reached him. Mr. Singleton threatened to challenge Mr. Lovejoy; an edifying example of respect for the Congressional laws against challenging to a duel. A Kentucky gentleman just then discovered an urgent necessity for cleaning his nails with a bowie-knife, and a goodly number of the chivalry were sustaining the honor of the South by shouting "traitor, traitor, villain, negro thief!" and by parliamentary propositions to hang Mr. Lovejoy, should he ever expose himself to Southern hospitality.

At this critical moment Mr. Cox had an attack of parliamentary order, and broke out involuntarily, as birds of that feather do, without regard to time or reason. Raising his shrill clarion above the din, he made his point of order, which was that Mr. Lovejoy was addressing the House from the floor in front of the Clerk's desk instead of from his own seat.

Thus Cox; and then he subsided. Great emergencies develop great minds. Who would have known Cox's parliamentary talent if this occasion had not occurred. To be sure, the right to take the rostrum when addressing the assembly, is recognized in all deliberative bodies; but all must admire the nice scent of the parliamentarian, who in all that gang of yelling blackguards, who were only restrained from acts which they threatened, by a wholesome fear, could discover no violation of parliamentary order except that Mr. Lovejoy was addressing the House from a place where all could hear him; and from the floor in front of the Clerk's desk, when it was conceded that he had a right to speak from the desk itself.

MICHELL'S NEW INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY.
A new publication to take a place in Mitchell's Geographical Series, for the intermediate classes in schools. The work is issued in quarto size, with handsome maps and engravings, made especially for this work and with all the departments of a complete geography. Published by R. H. Butler & Co., Philadelphia, and Robert Clarke & Co., 55 West Fourth-street, Cincinnati.

PROVIDENTIAL ERROR IN THE FUTURE.
The reason why the Democracy failed to carry Connecticut is thus stated by a Hartford correspondent of the New York Tribune:

"We feel here as if the triumph of Republicanism is owing to a direct interposition of Providence, for had not the Shams made an error in their figures, they would have overpowered us."

THE JOHN BROWN CASE IN HAYTI.
Mr. Reppert writes to the New York Tribune, from Boston, that he has private letters from Port-au-Prince which state that at least $25,000 (of American money) will be contributed by the people of Hayti to the family of John Brown; and he is assured, also, by a gentleman who has just returned from the island, that $25,000 in specie have already been collected and deposited for the family of the brave man whom they style "John Brown, Marier a la Cause des Noirs."

ANOTHER COMIC PAPER IN NEW YORK.
Mr. H. Markfield Adley, for a long time well-known in London as a publisher, arrived in New York on Friday by the Kansas. He is accompanied by Mr. William Verplanck, one of the trio of actors engaged by the London Punch. Mr. Adley proposes to establish a daily illustrated comic paper in that city, in size equaling the Paris Charivari. No expense has been spared in the preparations for the enterprise, and a thorough trial is to be made.

IMPORTATION OF HUNGARIAN GRAPE.
The Agricultural Division of the United States Patent Office has received several of the choicest varieties of grape slips, imported by Mr. John Bolter, from Hungary, which it is proposed to have propagated under the direction of that office, and by this means to establish a School of Horticulture, in the State of the Union. The fruit of these vines is said to be superior in quality to any other of the kind grown in this country, either for wine making or for table use.

WOOD'S THEATRE.
A very fair audience witnessed Mr. Edwin Booth's "Hamlet" last evening; but he did not play with his usual spirit, and often seemed to be only going through the motions of his part. The play was, however, well received, and the audience was well pleased.

NATIONAL THEATRE.
Miss Matilda Heron and Mr. Wallace appear this evening in the interesting drama from the French, Madame Chatterbox, to be followed by the comic local extravaganza of Chatterbox, which many of our readers doubtless remember to have seen when played by the lamented C. A. Logan, the talented artist. Perseus should be followed by the comic local extravaganza of Chatterbox, which many of our readers doubtless remember to have seen when played by the lamented C. A. Logan, the talented artist.

PIERCE OFFER.
Notwithstanding the heavy storm there was a good audience at the Opera-house last evening, to witness the eighth representation of The Frodo. This evening Mr. F. D. Conway will have a benefit, when the spectacle will be presented with the elegant scenery of The Morning Call. We hope this gentleman will have a large audience, for he well deserves a crowded house.

RIVER NEWS.
The Ohio has been swelling steadily opposite this city since our last reporting from the river. The water is now at a stage which is a channel-dredger to Louisville of nearly thirty feet. The river is twenty feet at Pittsburgh and rising, and a swelling all the way down. Doubtless it will be a very high river here, as the rain fell heavily and steadily from yesterday morning up to two o'clock, at which time we write—and will be continuing to fall for some time to come. On the wharf not much was doing yesterday. The weather, however, was very pleasant, and for all purposes as well as for the pleasure of the river, it was a very good day. Our quotations are unchanged, ruling as follows:
